Currently there are three kinds of building blocks: quarks, leptons and bosons. Read about Fermilab's search for the bottom and top quarks, the accelerator and detectors needed for their discovery, the spin-offs along the way, and the continuing efforts to reveal the basic particles and forces of nature. Searching for the Building Blocks of Matter was an exhibit for the public on the 15th floor of Wilson Hall at Fermi National Accelerator Laboratory.

Dark Chemistry and the Building Blocks of Life One of the most intriguing results from the Rosetta mission was the identification of the amino acid glycine. Our combined laboratory and modelling work shows that glycine can form ubiquitously in space under dark interstellar cloud conditions, well before the onset of star and planet formation.
