~~Change is unpredictable, emergent and often discontinuous (big spikes, separated by periods of inertia). Feedback often dampens change and drags the system back to equilibrium. Not only that, but the system is 'constantly changing without our intervention, and our efforts to change it will be more like joining a football game than sitting down to fix a broken clock.'~~

~~Switching the metaphor, the baby could be stillborn if we cannot midwife its birth. Change happens in the world and calls for change from us. We are inclined to talk of "emergence", and there is indeed a natural trajectory as life gets more complex. That natural trajectory is as true of ecologies as it is of socio-psychological reality.~~
