The wounds of nations explores the ways in which horror films allows international audiences to deal with the horrors of recent history - from genocide to terrorist outrage, nuclear war to radical political change. Far from being mere escapism or titillation, it shows how horror (whether it be from 1970s America, 1980s Germany, post-Thatcherite Britain or post-9/11 America) is in fact a highly political and potentially therapeutic film genre that enables us to explore, and potentially ...

Book Reviews. Issue 51. In The Wounds of Nations: Horror Cinema, Historical Trauma and National Identity, UK lecturer Linnie Blake argues for the horror genre 's unique ability to confront the consequences of traumatic national events for individual and collective identities. Central to Blake 's study is an examination of the process of nation building, which typically has emphasised continuity, commonality and progress to the extent that internal conflict and resistance are suppressed.
